ANGOVILLE-AU-PLAIN, France — It was June 1944. World War II raged across many countries in Europe, and France was no exception. Tens of thousands of men and women put their lives on the line for their countries, and many made the ultimate sacrifice.

However, less than an hour's drive away from the site of the largest seaborne invasion in history, two men made a stance to ensure that both ally and enemy alike wouldn't have to make that sacrifice.

In a small church in Angoville-au-Plain, Kenneth Moore and Robert Wright, both medics with the 101st Airborne Division, provided medical care to 80 Allied and German troops and one child in June 1944.

Just outside of the church, with its still blood-stained pews showing the remnants of combat long passed, stands a memorial adorned with an American flag and a French flag dedicated to these two men, where U.S., German and French service members, veterans and civilians gathered June 4 to pay their respects.

"It was honoring and humbling to be among the veterans of the greatest generation and be a part of a ceremony here, where some of them fought," said Col. Al Boyer, commander of 1st Brigade Combat Team, 101st Airborne Division. "Even when we are forced to fight, we still have to have a human side. We have to protect civilian lives and treat the enemy with fairness when we can. I think what these two gentlemen did back in 1944 is still very present in our military today. I believe we have the same characteristics and compassion in today's Army as we did in 1944, and I think put in the same situation, our Soldiers would do the same thing today."

After setting up the medical station in the church, Moore and Wright

COMMENTARY

Pressing record: Photographer in videography world

by Airman 1st Class Tryphena Mayhugh
86th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

I am an Air Force photojournalist and videographer.

From June to October 2014, I attended the Basic Photojournalist Course at the Defense Information School on Fort George G. Meade, Maryland, for my technical school. It was a very stressful 4 1/2 months, but I made it through to my first duty station at Ramstein.

Ever since I raised my right hand, there has been talk about combining the photojournalist and broadcast career fields that fall under public affairs. Several months ago, my superintendent came to my desk and told me I would be heading back to DINFOS to take another course, only this time it would be a 3 1/2-month course to learn videography.

At first, I was apprehensive about returning to DINFOS. I remembered how stressful the photography course was. Could I really go through it all over again? What if I was terrible? The Air Force would be investing time and money to send me to this course. What if I failed?

I forced myself to push these doubts aside, and as I did, I started to feel excitement. While this course may be tough, I was looking forward to the challenge.

Three other Airmen and I were chosen amongst our peers to be the first to receive official training in both photojournalism and videography. We were to be the guinea pigs that decided how some aspects of this merge would go in the future.

In the last few days of January, I found myself back at Fort Meade walking the halls of DINFOS again. I was enrolled in Video Production and Documentation Class 010-16. It was a much different class from the one I went through for photojournalism.

There was not only the difference between photography and video. My photojournalism class was comprised entirely of Airmen, both students and instructors. The VPD course was originally only for Marines and Army, and my fellow Airmen and I were added to see if this is where the Air Force wanted to send Airmen in the future.

It was a unique and rewarding experience to work in a joint environment. While there was some good-natured ribbing between the three branches, I was glad to have had the opportunity to work alongside the Soldiers and Marines in my class.

In this course, I learned basic composition and lighting techniques, various rules to follow when shooting video and how to piece your shots together into a well-edited video using Adobe Premiere. When your job requires you to produce something that is subjective, you have to have thick skin when it comes to getting critiques. My instructors were tough but fair, and I learned a lot from them.

I consider myself very lucky to have been selected for this training. When the inevitable merger comes to fruition, I will already be a step ahead of my peers and avoid having to learn a new skill through on-the-job training.

I also enjoyed undertaking a new challenge and furthering my education within my career field. There are many Airmen throughout the Air Force that may also face the challenge of learning a new skill because of a merge within their career field.

I was fortunate to receive official training, but several Airmen in my office have taken the initiative to learn all they can about video or photography before the merge begins. It is through initiative and motivation such as this that the Air Force continues to grow and expand as a whole.

Now that I am back at Ramstein, I look forward to being able to use my new skill for real-world applications instead of only for the classroom. I hope to do well as both a photojournalist and videographer and prove it was worth the Air Force's time and resources to send me to the course.

Cliff Goodall, a World War II veteran, signs an autograph after a memorial ceremony June 4 in Angoville-au-Plain, France. The memorial ceremony was in honor of Kenneth Moore and Robert Wright, medics with the 101st Airborne Division during World War II, who provided medical care to Allies and enemies alike at the Angoville-au-Plain church in June 1944.

searched the battlefield to find injured Soldiers. When a German officer arrived at the church and asked the medics to provide aid to German soldiers as well, Moore and Wright agreed. The only stipulation they gave before providing medical care was that weapons be left outside of the church so as not to compromise its status as a noncombatant facility.

"It was profound to be outside the church where (this) actually happened, where they dropped in, set up an aid station and saved lives opposed to what you usually see about people taking lives and capturing places," said Cpl. Connor Burgal, 3rd Brigade, 2nd Battalion, 506th Infantry Regiment, 101st Airborne Divison. "It was also really good to see the Germans here. They're here recognizing the heroes of our past, from both sides, because they saved their guys' lives as well as our own. As long as we can honor each other's past, we can build toward the future."

As the ceremony went on, representatives from the U.S., France and Germany laid wreaths and saluted the memorial as a show of respect and gratitude for what Moore and Wright not only did for the lives they saved but also for future generations to look back upon.

"For those of us who have been in combat, we understand that there is sacrifice and valor in war," Boyer said. "It's a human endeavor of death. For these two medics to do what they did in the fight here in 1944, to save both American and German lives, it shows the human side of combat. It shows the humanity that can exist even in the horrors of combat."

Mildenhall Airmen transit through Ramstein

An Airman from the 7th Special Operations Squadron at Royal Air Force Mildenhall, England, prepares a CV-22 Osprey for departure June 6 on Ramstein. The CV-22 crew were returning to Mildenhall from the D-Day remembrance airdrops in Normandy, France, and stopped by Ramstein to pick up their squadron members returning from a deployment.

A CV-22 Osprey assigned to the 7th Special Operations Squadron at Royal Air Force Mildenhall, England, landed June 6 at Ramstein.

The aircraft and its crew stopped on the way back to Mildenhall after participating in the D-Day remembrance airdrops in Normandy, France.

"It was a solemn experience, and all (who) were involved clearly understood the significance of the events that took place on June 6, 1944," said Capt. Ryan Andreasen, 7th SOS CV-22 instructor pilot. "We dropped a mixture of U.S. Army, Navy, Air Force and French special operations personnel who were performing military free-fall jumps over Normandy in remembrance of D-Day."

Andreasen said their time in Normandy was a chance to sharpen their operational skills and enhance their ability to cooperate with other units during missions.

"Military free fall is one of the methods we use in order to employ special operations forces," Andreasen said. "The remembrance airdrops gave us the opportunity to exercise our ability to perform with the same special operations forces that we work with on a regular basis."

In addition to taking part in the airdrops, the crew picked up several 7th SOS members coming home from deployment.

"On our return flight from France, we had the opportunity to stop by Ramstein Air Base to pick up some of our squadron mates who were returning from a contingency deployment," Andreasen said. "It was great to see our brothers in arms return safely to their homes and family members."

Maj. Seth Cannon, 352nd Special Operations Wing deputy of wing plans and deployed team member, said he was looking forward to coming home after their mission.

"We were supporting (security operations of the United States and its allies)," Cannon said. "We had a very successful deployment, everybody really performed well.

"After a few months of being (deployed), it'll be nice getting back with friends and family. It's nice of our unit to send an aircraft to come get us," Cannon continued.

Cannon said the knowledge he and his teammates acquired during the deployment will benefit the 7th SOS in the future.

"We're taking our experiences downrange back to our squadron," Cannon said. "They'll certainly be utilized to enhance our local training."

Even though Andreasen, Cannon and their respective teams performed different missions in separate locations, they both return to Mildenhall with knowledge and experiences they believe will help make the 7th SOS a stronger and more effective warfighting unit.

cises is important for him and his wingmen to stay on top of their game.

"We are here in Swidwin, Poland, assisting the Polish military with Anakonda 2016 while also supporting the 173rd Airborne Brigade's mission as well," Musso said. "Here, we've been getting to work with joint (attacks) observers. We're getting some valuable training with them we wouldn't normally get."

Anakonda 2016 is based on a combined-threat structure, in which forces participating in this event can expect to train for both conventional and nonconventional forces as well as criminal elements.

The exercise is not only a way for service members to test and develop their job skills, but it also displays the capability that the U.S. has to enable and execute a full range of military missions with its allies to support Europe.

Musso believes these efforts are embodied by the service members working with their European allies.

"It's important that we continue to do these exercises on this scale with so many of our allies," Musso said. "We all need to come together with all of our individual tactics and training we've had over our careers and collectively bring them together."

Anakonda 16 involves more than 25,000 participants, with approximately 12,000 U.S. Soldiers. The exercise reinforces the United States' commitment to Poland and its Baltic allies.

According to Capt. Jacob Hoffman, Polish army JTAC, one of the many important aspects of the event is testing his ability to communicate with so many other nations' service members.

"In an air traffic control tower, English is the only language someone can communicate to other planes with," Hoffman said. "This exercise helps me by making me test my English with so many other people."

The U.S. has participated in this exercise since 2012, with each year seeing participation growing in size and scope.

As the U.S. European Command commander, Gen. Philip M. Breedlove, said in his February 2016 posture statement, "We cannot overemphasize how important European nations, in particular our North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies and non-NATO partners, are to ensuring America's security and safety."

If the traveler is unable to present the orders to Sato, then the official who directed the travel is responsible for doing so. For details, contact your local official travel office.

SAFETY CORNER

Most modern vehicles have anti-lock brake systems. ABS brakes prevent uncontrolled skids during hard braking by sensing wheel lock-up and releasing brake pressure, many times per minute, just long enough to prevent a skid. Do you know how to react when the system activates? In many vehicles, drivers may experience a rapid pulsation of the brake pedal, almost as if the brake pedal is pushing back. Sometimes, the pedal may suddenly drop. The valves in the ABS controller may make a noise that sounds like grinding or buzzing. In some cars, you may feel a slight vibration; this means the ABS is working. It is important not to take your foot off the brake pedal when you hear noise or feel pulsations, but instead continue to apply firm pressure to stop in the shortest distance possible and maintain steering.

PTS: Treatable, normal response to abnormal events

by Dr. Joseph Maio
Landstuhl Regional Medical Center

June is Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder Awareness Month, so it's a good time to think about this common problem. Estimates of post-traumatic stress in the military suggest that 12 to 15 percent of service members who have been deployed meet the PTSD diagnostic criteria. Many more experience the effects of PTS without necessarily having a diagnosis of PTSD. PTS also is common in the general U.S. population. Ten percent of women and 5 percent of men meet the criteria for PTSD as a result of the various traumas that people face, such as sexual abuse, domestic violence and other crimes. The rate of PTSD in females is higher because they are more likely to be victimized.

Some experts suggest that it is more appropriate to talk about PTS injury instead of using the label of PTSD. It is important to recognize that PTS is not some disease you catch. It is the result of experiencing a severe trauma and then responding to that trauma in a very human way, and PTS is a pervasive injury. It affects one's thinking, emotions, memory, sleep, physical health, sense of self and spirit.

Someone with PTS typically struggles with intrusive memories, images and nightmares, which create a kind of persistent mental torment. There is hypervigilance and a heightened level of arousal. The fight-flight-freeze response is in overdrive. Trauma survivors also tend to be irritable and angry.

PTS is also marked by avoidance — for example, avoiding public places and crowds. The person also puts a lot of effort into blocking out thoughts and memories of the trauma and is reluctant to talk about it with anyone. Sometimes you see excessive use of alcohol or other drugs, excessive gambling or promiscuity. These behaviors are intended to numb the person emotionally or distract them from the thoughts and feelings that torment them.

PTS often leads to a very negative view of self, others and the world, often leading to an exaggerated sense of danger and vulnerability, difficulty trusting others, unreasonable self-blame and guilt, and feelings of worthlessness. Furthermore, PTS can have a huge impact on relationships. The anger can be an issue, of course, but emotional numbing, withdrawal and isolation also take their toll on relationships.

Because the emotional impact of PTS is so strong and some reactions are over-the-top compared to what one ordinarily sees in everyday life, like hitting the floor when a door slams, the person with PTS starts to think they might be crazy. And too often, uninformed people around them might suggest the same. But it's not crazy at all. Indeed, it has been said that PTS is a normal response to abnormal events. Nonetheless, PTS can be confusing for family and friends. One often hears the statement that the person who came back from war is not the person who went away.

Different factors can increase the likelihood of developing PTS, including a history of earlier trauma, multiple traumas, multiple deployments and prolonged exposure to traumatic situations. Also, it may be that some people's baseline brain chemistry puts them at greater risk for PTS. That is, the part of the brain that is responsible for the fight-flight-freeze response may be primed to react more intensely.

A key factor in the development and maintenance of PTS is what the person comes to believe as a result of the experience. Take this scenario: A Soldier loses a friend in combat, a terrible event no matter what. If the surviving Soldier tells himself that his friend died because he was in a war environment, he will grieve over the loss of his friend, but PTS is less likely. On the other hand, if the Soldier says, "It's my fault my friend died," the likelihood of PTS has gone up dramatically. Similarly, a returning Soldier who does not differentiate between the risk in a combat environment and the risk at home is more likely to develop PTS than a Soldier who sees that the risk at home is much lower.

The good news about PTS is that it is treatable, although it takes time and a lot of hard work. You can't completely erase the effects of PTS, but people can get to the point where the negative impact of the trauma is greatly reduced, where they are able to experience happiness and peace of mind again, where they have the freedom to do what they want out in the world, and where they can have solid, loving relationships again. For most people, therapy happens in an outpatient clinic, such as the LRMC behavioral health clinics that serve adults, adolescents and children. Other military medical treatment facilities in Europe also have behavioral health clinics. One issue to consider is access to treatment for different categories of beneficiaries — active duty, family members, retirees and civilian employees.

If a medical treatment facility cannot provide the needed services there are providers on the economy. TRICARE can provide information about this option. One treatment option for active-duty military personnel in U.S. European Command, Africa Command and Central Command is the Trauma Intensive Outpatient Program at LRMC, also known as Evolution. For more information, see the Evolution webpage at http://rhce.amedd.army.mil/landstuhl/services.cfm?MTFinfo_id=693.

However, not everyone needs the level of intensity of an IOP, so interested service members should talk to their outpatient behavioral health provider to see if it might be an appropriate choice for them.

An important consideration in getting treatment is whether you are getting the right kind of treatment. There are three forms of treatment for PTS that have been shown to work. These are cognitive processing therapy, prolonged exposure, and eye movement desensitization and reprocessing. It is important to ask what type of treatment the provider offers and, as treatment progresses, make sure the provider is sticking to the protocol.

Another consideration to ask about is how often someone can be seen. Trauma recovery is hard work, and it goes better with regular appointments. If someone is seen once every four to six weeks, they are at a disadvantage with respect to recovery. People who want to recover have to commit to regular appointments. If someone goes to therapy just once in a while, it is unrealistic to expect much progress.

There are good online resources related to PTS. For example, the National Center for PTSD is a solid source of information for patients, families and professionals. Visit their website at www.ptsd.va.gov. There also are some Twitter feeds that can provide information and encouragement. Some of these include @ptsdpro, @ptsd and @ptsdchat.

Service members search for more than gold

by Staff Sgt. Timothy Moore
86th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

They wake in the early hours of the morning to go out to their site. They set up screening stations, and for the next six to eight hours, they withstand the changing weather as they search through tons of dirt one bucket at a time.

They look more like gold miners than service members, but they aren't searching for gold. They are looking for something, to some, more important than gold. They are looking for evidence of a fallen hero's presence.

The Defense POW/MIA Accounting Agency seeks to provide the fullest possible accounting for missing personnel from past wars to their families and the nation. These men and women are the way they do that.

"It's my job to make sure a fallen hero is presentable to their families and given the honor they deserve," said Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Stoner, NCO in charge of Mortuary Affairs, 16th Sustainment Brigade, 21st Theater Sustainment Command. "It's different being out here looking for evidence of someone's presence, but it's no less important that we are as dedicated and thorough to honor these fallen heroes."

There are approximately 82,000 personnel who are unaccounted for from past conflicts, including soldiers from World War II. It is with the personnel this number represents and their loved ones that the Department of Defense formally created one agency, DPAA, responsible for the recovery and accounting of missing service members from these conflicts.

With assistance from host nations, DPAA sends out a research and investigation team to comb through archives and talk to military or governmental officials with knowledge of a particular region or battle to track down leads.

An investigative team will follow up on the leads of the RIT to obtain enough information to connect a particular site with unaccounted personnel. Their findings and recommendations help to determine recovery sites.

Once a site has been designated, recovery teams are deployed to begin their search.

"The work can be tough, and it can be disheartening when you search through tons and tons of soil and find nothing," said Dr. Meghan-Tomasita Cosgriff-Hernandez, a forensic anthropologist with DPAA. "But when you do find something, it's a great feeling to know that not only was the research and investigation worthwhile but also that you are closer to giving a family closure. That's a great feeling."

Cosgriff-Hernandez said that even though the goal is to find someone and remove their missing-in-action label, it isn't always a bad to find nothing.

"It typically takes about five recovery missions to close down a site," Cosgriff-Hernandez said. "If after a few visits to a site we don't find anything else, it might just mean we've found all that was there. If we could, we would comb through entire fields looking for even the smallest thing, but experience has shown us when we need to start looking toward another site and working toward giving another family some peace of mind."

Cosgriff-Hernandez looks at that as the ultimate goal of her job, and Stoner agrees.

"The DPAA European detachment commander visited our site and told us about a family member who was being interviewed about her fallen hero, her family being found," Stoner said. "She was asked if we owed the men and women anything. At first, she said no. Then, she came back to say we owe them their names because they don't deserve to be listed as missing in action. We owe them their names. I think that's the least we can do."

Buying, selling used cars in Germany

by Joerg Moddelmog
Kaiserslautern Legal Services Center

Are you thinking about buying a used car downtown, or are you about to sell your car to a fellow service member? Then you might be interested to know that in both cases, the sale and purchase is subject to German law. Therefore, it is good to know what host nation laws say on the subject of warranties and defects.

Even though verbal contracts are valid and fully enforceable in Germany, only a written agreement enables you to adequately prove the terms of the agreement and clarify each other's obligations. All terms should be reduced to writing and signed by the parties because written contracts are presumed to be correct, complete and without binding oral or side agreements.

The buyer should have the car thoroughly checked and tested before the sale is concluded. The car should be inspected by a trustworthy, independent third party such as a garage.

Since it does not say anything about the real condition of the car, passing inspection is hardly enough proof that the car will remain reliable. Rather, it just shows the car is doing fine at that one moment.

A clause such as "inspection guaranteed" only means that the seller has the duty, and the right, to place the car into such a condition that it passes inspection.

Normal wear and tear usually does not constitute a legally relevant defect, even if it impairs the functioning of a used car, unless the buyer demands a clear, concrete and binding representation from the seller to the contrary. Therefore, the buyer should ask the seller for specific assurances and express warranties or guarantees for certain conditions that are important to him or her. These should be put down in writing.

In Germany, the average total life span of a car is 10 years. After eight years, rust is a significant danger for almost every car in Germany and, therefore, is considered to be normal wear and tear.

When buying a new car from a dealership, the warranty period is two years. It is reduced to one year if you buy a used car from a dealer.

Only when buying from a private person can the warranty be excluded completely by terms such as: "as is," "with all faults" or "Gebraucht wie besichtigt," which means "bought as seen."

It is also important to verify the seller's name on the bill of sale and to keep a copy of the power of attorney if the seller is selling on behalf of another person. Do not hesitate to ask to see the seller's ID.

Additionally, you should keep the seller's local address and phone number on file in case you need to contact them later should a problem arise.

If you encounter problems when selling or buying a car, feel free to contact either the German attorney-adviser Matthias Voelker at the Ramstein Law Center at 489-2552 or 06371-47-2552; or German legal assistance attorneys Joerg C. Moddelmog and Holger Blug at the Kaiserslautern Legal Services Center on Kleber Kaserne at 483-8848 or 0631-411-8848.

Ingredients for 4 people

Slightly more than 1 pound of chicken breast, diced in ½ inch cubes
1 cup sundried tomatoes, chopped in half
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon ground white pepper
1 teaspoon dried oregano
A sprinkle of chili
8 ounces cream
1 tablespoon chicken broth
1 quart water
1 pound penne noodles
½ cup chopped parsley
½ cup mozzarella cheese, finely diced in ½ inch cubes

In a Dutch oven pot, heat the oil and roast chicken on all sides. Season with salt, pepper, chili and oregano. Add tomatoes. Roast all for a few minutes. Add cream, broth and water. Once this boils, add pasta. Put in a 180 degree Celsius oven. Allow to cook for 15 minutes, stirring every 5 minutes. Three minutes before penne noodles are done, add the mozzarella and chopped parsley. Gently stir mozzarella and parsley into mixture. When the pasta is done, you are ready to add the chicken to the pot. Stir and you are ready to serve.

A nice side dish is a light summer salad with tomatoes, lettuce and cucumbers. Vinegar and oil dressing is typical for this salad. The dressing has a touch of salt, sugar and ground white pepper for flavor.

Multinational medics ensure paratroopers' safety at Swift Response 16

by Capt. Richard Skinner and Capt. Jeku Arce
421st Medical Battalion and 30th Medical Brigade Public Affairs

TORUN, Poland — U.S., Polish and U.K. medics provided drop-zone medical coverage for an airborne operation involving more than 1,500 paratroopers from multiple nations June 7 in support of Swift Response 16, a multinational exercise being conducted in conjunction with exercise Anakonda 16.

The 82nd Airborne Division, Poland's 6th Airborne Brigade and Britain's 16 Air Assault Brigade conducted the airborne operations as part of this U.S. Army-led exercise to enhance the readiness of the combat core of the U.S. global response force with allied high-readiness forces in Europe.

Medical teams from the 30th Medical Brigade, Poland's 1st Army Field Hospital, 10th Military Hospital and the United Kingdom's 16th Medical Regiment provided roving medics on the drop zone, coordinated air and ground evacuation and provided immediate medical care to injured paratroopers in medical tents next to the drop zone.

Less than 1 percent of paratroopers sustained injuries, all of which were minimal, during this airborne operation.

Swift Response 16 demonstrated the ability of the medical interoperability of U.S. and partner nations to respond to a real-world, high-risk casualty producing operation, validate capabilities, and integrate medical policies and procedures.

While in Poland, the 30th Medical Brigade also provided medical mission command for Anakonda 16 and will host the key event that will validate the mass-casualty plans of the 44th Chemical Battalion and 1-3 Infantry Divisionon June 11 at Drawsko Pomorskie Training Area.

Becoming better sponsors for incoming Airmen

by Senior Airman Larissa Greatwood
86th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

Imagine arriving in a foreign country for the first time as you start the next leg of your military career. Not only is the long flight exhausting but also carrying multiple bags, maybe children and pets and trying to figure out the next step can become extremely stressful.

Once situated in a dorm room or temporary-living facility, what is the next step? A sponsor can help figure out that next step.

During a tour at Ramstein, many Airmen may have the opportunity to assist newcomers to their unit. It's important to set them up for success so their transition is as smooth as possible. The Airman and Family Readiness Center provides a sponsorship training class once a month to teach potential sponsors the importance of taking care of their own.

"The purpose of the sponsorship training is to provide newly appointed sponsors a guide to assist new arriving personnel in (the Kaiserslautern Military Community)," said Roderick Dailey, 86th Force Support Squadron Airman and Family Readiness Center community readiness specialist. "It's important to train sponsors to become great sponsors to ensure they are able to help make transitions as seamless as possible.

"I hope the sponsors who attend this class create and maintain a tradition of being a great sponsor so when the newcomers become sponsors they remember how positive their experience was and they provide the same or better experience for others," Dailey continued.

The class provides attendees with a checklist of items to take care of before a new member arrives as well as the sponsor's duties once they're officially on station. During the class, potential sponsors learn how to answer most, if not all, questions a new member may have when coming to the KMC.

"Taking the class, I learned about what my sponsor could have done for me when I first got here," said Staff Sgt. Amanda Iarossi, 86th Medical Squadron MRI technologist. "I think the training is super beneficial and will help me become a good sponsor. (The training) organizes everything and gives us the tools to assist (the newcomer) in a more straightforward way."

Iarossi said the training as well as her experience arriving to Germany will help her become a helpful and effective sponsor.

"It is extremely overwhelming when first arriving here," Iarossi said. "Especially having a family, it was hard to balance in and outprocessing, work and taking care of my family. My sponsors were pretty good about helping me, but things can always be better. I want to make sure I take care of them as best as I can."

To sign up for sponsorship training, contact the AFRC at 480-5900 or 016371-47-5900.

Ask an attorney: Owning private firearm in Germany

by R. Peter Masterton
21st Theater Sustainment Command Legal Office

Q: I've heard it is difficult, but is there any way to bring my personal firearms to Germany?

A: Owning a firearm in Germany can be a challenge. Germany has special rules that make it difficult to own, ship and store privately owned firearms. This article is designed to provide a general introduction to the rules. Specific questions should be addressed to your local U.S. forces vehicle registration office, which is the military office responsible for registering both motor vehicles and firearms.

U.S. personnel who come to Germany are not permitted to bring privately owned firearms with them until they are properly registered with the U.S. forces and German authorities. Unfortunately, this cannot be done prior to arrival. Once you arrive, you will have to overcome a number of hurdles before you can import or buy a firearm.

German law requires their citizens to demonstrate that they are reliable and pass certain tests before they can own a firearm. By agreement with the German government, U.S. forces personnel are required to meet these same requirements.

Before you can obtain a license to own a firearm, you have to establish your need for a firearm. This can be done in two ways: You can obtain a German hunting license or a German certificate of need for sport shooters. The German hunting license can be obtained by passing a U.S. Forces Rod and Gun Club or Outdoor Recreation sponsored German hunting course. The German certificate of need for sport shooting can be obtained through membership in a German or U.S. forces sport-shooting club, active participation in shooting events for a period of one year or more with a minimum of 18 visits to the range, maintenance of a shooting log book, and obtaining insurance protection. Once you have obtained one of these documents, you may be issued a German weapons possession card listing your specific privately owned firearms. If the weapons possession card is issued based on a German hunting license, you will only be authorized ownership of rifles and shotguns and up to two pistols. If the card is issued based on a German certificate of need, you will only be authorized to own the weapons you use for sport shooting.

To obtain a permit to own a privately owned firearm you must also request a background check from the FBI using an AE Form 190-6D Part A. The FBI background check is similar to the one required for firearm owners in the United States. Once the background check has been successfully completed, you should request a statement of reliability, an AE Form 190-6H(A) for military personnel and civilian employees or an AE Form 190-6H(B) for family members, from the first O-5 level commander in your chain of command. The forms to request the background check and statement of reliability can be found at the U.S. Army Europe website, https://aepubs.army.mil/ae/public.

Once these requirements have been completed, you should submit an application for registration of your firearms, AE Form 190-6D, to your local U.S. forces vehicle registration office. After you have obtained your license, you may bring your firearms to Germany. If you plan to hand carry your weapons, you will need to comply with airline firearms rules. Because of airline restrictions on weapon transport, prior planning is important.

Getting your firearms back to the United States at the end of your tour of duty here can also be a challenge. If you purchased any firearms in Germany, you will have to get permission to import them into the United States from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. Military personnel will need to fill out an ATF Form 6-Part 2 and government civilian employees will need to complete an ATF Form 6-Part 1. The application should be submitted at least six months prior to your permanent-change-of-station move, as the approval is only valid for a year and can take up to six months to process. If you have written documentation that you brought your firearms with you, you may return them without permission of the ATF.

Once you have received permission to bring your firearms to the United States, you should bring all your paperwork to your local U.S. forces vehicle registration office to begin the deregistration process. Handguns and long guns may be returned in a government household goods shipment, hand carried with the permission of the airline or shipped through an authorized German firearms dealer to an authorized U.S. firearms dealer. Military members can also send long guns to the U.S. through the U.S. postal service.

Editor's note: This article only provides an overview of the rules relating to privately owned firearms. More information can be found in Army in Europe Regulation 190-6 or from your local U.S. forces vehicle registration office.

At The Movies

With help from her friends Nemo and Marlin, Dory embarks on an epic adventure to find her parents, who she was separated from as a child. Her journey brings her to a conservatory that houses diverse ocean species. Dory now knows that in order to be reunited with her mom and dad, she must save them from captivity.

Starring Ellen Degeneres and Diane Keaton.

Ratchet & Clank (PG)

Two unlikely heroes, Ratchet and Clank, struggle to stop a vile alien named Chairman Drek from destroying every planet in the Solana Galaxy. When the two stumble upon a dangerous weapon capable of destroying entire planets, they must join forces with a team of colorful heroes called The Galactic Rangers in order to save the galaxy. Along the way they'll learn about heroism, friendship, and the importance of discovering one's own identity.

Starring James Arnold Taylor and David Kaye.

Central Intelligence (PG-13)

Bob, a one-time bullied geek, grew up to be a lethal CIA agent. While home for his high school reunion, Bob claims to be on a top-secret case and enlists the help of former big-man-on-campus Calvin, now an accountant who misses his glory days. But before the staid numbers-cruncher realizes what he's getting into, it's too late to get out, as his increasingly unpredictable new friend drags him through a world of shootouts, double-crosses and espionage that could get them both killed in more ways than Calvin can count.

Starring Dwayne Johnson and Kevin Hart.
